■ Organizational Profile ■

Founded 98 years ago, the Taipei Zoo was relocated to the current site in Wenshan District (Muzha) in October 1986. The establishment of the new Zoo boasts four major functions – education, research, conservation, and recreation, being regarded as one of the finest, globally-recognized metropolitan zoos in the world. Structurally, the Taipei Zoo originally had 4 divisions and 6 offices, but the Conservation and Research Center and several others, including the Research and Evaluation Office, the Systems Administration Office, the Animal Adoption Team, and the Engineering Team, were added in recent years in response to the Zoo's operational development. Additionally, the Labor Safety Supervising Team was established in September 2012 to reinforce workplace safety and health inspections. The Zoo's personnel quota is 329 (not including temporary staff), and currently, the Zoo has 304 personnel – 65 staff members, 197 workers, 13 contract employees, and 29 security guards.

■ Service Status ■

The Taipei Zoo covers a total area of 165 hectares of which nearly 100 hectares have already been developed and utilized with the remaining area being reserved as natural secondary forest. Exhibition zones open to the public include 6 indoor centers (i.e. Education Center, Penguin House, Koala House, Amphibian and Reptile House, Insectarium, and Giant Panda House), 8 outdoor areas (i.e. Formosan Animal Area, Children's Zoo, Asian Tropical Forest Area, Desert Animal Area, Australian Animal Area, African Animal Area, Temperate Zone Animal Area, and Bird World), and the Conservation Exhibition Center.

In 2012, the number of visitors has reached 2.96 million. The Zoo currently houses 404 species of penned-in animals totaling 2,554 individuals in number (not including insects, some fish, and animals under the COA's shelter program).
